NICARAGUA/
CIA MINING

JENNINGS: Senator Barry Goldwater and CIA Director William Casey have been arguing for some time now about if and when the Senate Intelligence Committee was informed about CIA participation in the mining of Nicaraguan waters. To prove his point that the committee was never adequately briefed, Senator Goldwater today published word for word what Casey told the committee about the mining. It was one sentence long. And according to Senator Goldwater, there was never any mention of the CIA. Goldwater also said that not one of the 15 other senators on the committee decided anything was amiss.

JENNINGS: And just one other note on the CIA and the Senate. Senator Patrick Moynihan made it official today he is resigning as vice chairman of the Intelligence Committee. Moynihan was unhappy with the lack of information from the CIA. He is resigning in protest.
